CHINESE SAID TO HAVE SOLD 'DOPE' PERMITS

When Jim Young, a Chinese arrested a few days ago for having opium in his possession, is brought before the police court next week, he may find that he has graver charges lodged against him than he expected. For, according to the prosecuting officers, Jim Young is guilty of gross cheat.

Evidence is being secured to show that Jim Young was attempting to make a living doing a commission business in the sale of physician's certificates, the certificates stating that the bearer is addicted to the use of opium. Jim Young is said to have offered to sell such certificates, which were first to be obtained from a physician, to different Chinese in the city for $15 each. The doctor's fee for issuing one was to be $5, a profit of $10 therefore for Jim.

So far the Chinese's alleged business is not unlawful, as the prosecuting officers view it. But the attention of A. M. Brown, the deputy city and county attorney, has been called to the fact that Jim has represented that by the certificate its bearer is permitted to smoke opium to his heart's delight. This is where the gross cheat comes in.

For while the certificate authorizes licensed drug stores to sell to its bearer a prepared form of opium to be taken internally, it in no wise allows the holder of it to smoke the drug, notwithstanding Jim's alleged representation to the contrary. How many of these certificates, if any, he has sold is not known. The authorities are investigating and may be able to show that he has done quite a business.

One physician has stated that he gave Jim a certificate, charging him $5 for it.
